DETAILS SET FOR ALL-TEXAS TOURNAMENT

Homeschool baseball tournament to feature top high school talent

This coming March, the Northside Baseball Academy will be hosting the first-ever All-Texas Homeschool Baseball Tournament at Barton Park in Conroe, Texas. Scheduled for March 10-11, 2006, the tournament will feature six high school level baseball teams from the Houston, San Antonio and Metroplex areas. As a showcase event for top homeschool players, the tournament promises to be a great opportunity for both athletes and scouts. College scouts, in particular, will have an opportunity to evaluate a number of top players at one time, players that may otherwise go unnoticed in a regular season of evaluating public and private school players.

The 2006 tournament will feature the Northside Falcons, Dallas Angels, West Houston Thunder, West Ft. Worth Warriors, San Antonio Patriots and Montgomery County Mustangs. The Seniors and Juniors on these teams represent some of the best ballplayers in the state; by extension, the tournament offers a real opportunity for potential “scoops” by college and university scouts.

Homeschool baseball has gained an increasing level of exposure and popularity over the past five years as games and tournaments attract the attention of college scouts, professional teams and the media. Regular seasons for homeschool teams typically consist of games against area public schools, private schools and other homeschool teams. In April, regional tournaments are conducted, with the top teams advancing to the annual Homeschool World Series held at the end of May. The All-Texas Tournament is the first known state-level competition of its kind.

Anyone interested in learning more about this tournament, or homeschool baseball in general, may contact Fred Watt at 936-756-2292. Fred is the director of both the Northside Falcons (a Christian Homeschool team based in Conroe, Texas) and the Northside Baseball Academy (the host of the All-Texas Tournament).
